

Sharron
ANGLE

Please Join:

George Watson D.O. &
Wayne Iverson, M.D.

For a Breakfast Reception Featuring:

Nevada U.S. Senate, Republican Nominee

Sharron Angle

Saturday, Sept. 18, 2010
7:00 am

Location:

Salt Lake City Marriott City Center
(Please RSVP for Details)

Gold Sponsors - $4,800

Silver Sponsors - $2,400

or $125 per person

RSVP to AAPS

aaps@aapsonline.org or (800) 635-1196

Contributions are not deductible as charitable contributions for federal income tax purposes. Contributions from individuals and unincorporated business entities are permitted, up to a maximum of $2,400 for the general election. Couples may donate up to a maximum of $4,800 for the general election. Federal multi-candidate PACs may donate up to a maximum of $5,000 for the general election. Contributions from corporations, labor unions, federal government contractors, national banks and foreign nationals without permanent residency status are prohibited.

Paid for by Friends of Sharron Angle

Friends of Sharron Angle Contribution Remittance Form

I/we will attend on September 18, 2010. Please reserve:

1 Gold Sponsorship (two tickets) $4,800
1 Silver Sponsorship (two tickets) $2,400
__ Ticket(s) at $125 per individual
(Maximum contribution $2400/individual & $4800/couple.)
Enclosed is our contribution of $_____

First Name Last Name:

Spouse's First Name: Spouse's Last Name:

Is this a joint contribution? Yes No

Residence Address:

City: State: Zip:

(_____) _____
Phone: Email:

Employer (name of company if self-employed):

Occupation:

If paying by credit card: Visa MC Amex Discover

Credit Card Number Expiration Date

I agree to contribute: $_____ charged to the card indicated above.

Signed: _____

Make Checks Payable to "Friends of Sharron Angle"

Mail to:
Friends of Sharron Angle
c/o AAPS
1601 N Tucson Blvd. #9
Tucson, AZ 85716

Contributions are not deductible as charitable contributions for federal income tax purposes. Contributions from individuals and unincorporated business entities are permitted, up to a maximum of $2,400 for the general election. Couples may donate up to a maximum of $4,800 for the general election. Federal multi-candidate PACs may donate up to a maximum of $5,000 for the general election. Contributions from corporations, labor unions, federal government contractors, national banks and foreign nationals without permanent residency status are prohibited.

Contributions greater than $2400 can be made with a single check, however each spouse must sign the check.

Paid for by Friends of Sharron Angle

Sharron Angle

Republican Nominee for United States Senate, Nevada

Sharron Angle and husband Ted

After winning the Republican nomination for U.S. Senate in Nevada, Sharron Angle led Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid by 11 points in respected independent polls like one done by Rasmussen on June 10.

Since then, Democrat Harry Reid has spent huge sums of money attacking Sharron, in an effort to cast her as “outside the mainstream of Nevada politics.”

Sharron is a common sense conservative whose campaign has generated perhaps more interest than any Senate contest in the nation.

Not only is she a candidate who unyieldingly sticks to her beliefs, but she’s running against the poster child for President Barack Obama’s wildly unpopular policy agenda in the Senate.

Harry Reid has repeatedly played the central role in shaping policies like Obamacare, Cap and Trade, the financial reform bill which institutionalizes “too big to fail,” and more.

Sharron raised 2.3 million between April 1 and June 30, demonstrating that she is running the kind of effective campaign that will have the resources it needs to compete. Top conservative strategists are confident that this race will continue to be one of the most competitive in the nation through Election Day.

Meanwhile, Harry Reid has been unable to move his own approval rating above 43 for the entirety of 2010. Reid’s unpopular record is enough alone to send Sharron Angle to the U.S. Senate, but she’s not taking any chances.

Trial Lawyers and Labor Unions have funneled millions of dollars into Harry Reid’s campaign account, and his cash on hand is high. Sharron Angle will need the support of conservative donors across the nation to claim victory this November.

Paid for by Friends of Sharron Angle

Nevada Senate Race A “Toss Up”

As of July 19th, nationally acclaimed political analysts Charlie Cook and Stu Rothenberg both rate the Nevada Senate race a “toss up,” making the contest one of the most competitive in the country.

Newsweek.com – July 6, 2010

November’s race is still shaping up as a tough battle for Reid, given the toxic anti-incumbent mood in the country. He has been in the Senate since 1986, and for many voters, he embodies a Washington establishment that has pursued high-spending policies, including contentious health-care reforms, yet failed to revive the economy.

Nevada is feeling the pain more than most—at 14 percent, the state has the highest unemployment in the nation. This may explain why Reid’s job approval languishes in the 30s (normally fatal for a well-known incumbent seeking reelection) and why he continues to trail in general-election poll match-ups against Angle, by 7 points according to Rasmussen and 3 in the latest Las Vegas Review-Journal poll.

USNEWS.COM – July 16, 2010

LOS ANGELES — Nevada Republican Sharron Angle’s Senate campaign was broke two months ago, but in a surprising turnaround the tea party favorite banked more money than Majority Leader Harry Reid between April and June, records showed Thursday.

Angle raised $2.6 million during the three-month period, topping the powerful Democratic leader, who pulled in $2.4 million.

The Wall Street Journal – July 17, 2010

To win, Sharron Angle is going to need a major money influx from the conservative groups that pushed her over the top in the primary to counter the $25 million Mr. Reid is expected to spend. What Mrs. Angle has going for her is a contagious optimism that Nevadans would never send Mr. Reid back to the Senate given the fiscal carnage in Washington.

Nevada voters, she says, “are disillusioned, disappointed and disgusted with what had happened since the 2008 election. They are tired of this establishment machine that doesn’t understand that we—the people—are in control. They are saying ‘We don’t care if you’re a Republican or a Democrat. We don’t believe either one of you.’”

She is banking on the depth of this discontent to help her topple the most powerful man in the United States Senate.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

Angling for Harry Reid

THE WEEKEND INTERVIEW JULY 17, 2010

Why the tea party favorite thinks voters will reject the attacks on her views and help her topple the Senate majority leader.

By STEPHEN MOORE

Sharron Angle first realized the extent of the brewing revolt against Washington in late March, at a tea party protest in Searchlight, Nev. A "Woodstock of the West," she calls it. "More than 30,000 people sojourned to this tiny rural town of 900 people," Mrs. Angle says. "The highways were jammed up and became parking lots."

To get to the stage, this 60-year-old grandmother of 10 says she "climbed on the back of a Harley Davidson Road King bike and rode through the immense crowds." Once there, she reminded the throng that Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid must be replaced.

Now, after sprinting past two better-known and better-funded opponents in the June Republican primary, the party has chosen Mrs. Angle to go up against him. "I knew that if we were going to actually defeat Harry Reid," Mrs. Angle says, "we had to have a candidate who would offer a sharp policy contrast. Someone who would not just pay lip service to limited government principles, but had a solid record of voting that way time and again. I'm that candidate."

Thus has Sharron Angle—a former teacher, business owner, state legislator and political rabble-rouser—emerged as one of the three most prominent figures in the tea party movement. Sarah Palin and Rand Paul of Kentucky are the other two. Her campaign to become the next U.S. Senator from Nevada figures to be among the most closely watched, and surely among the most colorful, contests this November.

Liberal groups and Mr. Reid are gleeful that a "right wing extremist" has won the GOP nomination. At a recent fund raising dinner for the majority leader in Las Vegas, President Barack Obama labeled her "extreme, even for a Republican." Some Republicans privately grumble that she may be unelectable because of her staunchly conservative stands. And to be sure, some of her positions, such as banning fluoridated water or providing massages to rehabilitate convicts, seem a bit, well, odd.

But is she the kook Mr. Reid portrays her as in his TV ads?

I met with Mrs. Angle twice, first in Washington, D.C., late last month, then again during the Freedomfest conference last week in Las Vegas. In person, she seems anything but a threat to the American way of life. She is petite, has Irish red hair with and a pretty round face. She's friendly, but businesslike, and unlike most politicians, comes across as sincere in her convictions. Her husband, Ted, a 35 year veteran of the Bureau of Land Management (he explains that he's a conservative who worked to protect property rights, not violate them), stands constantly by her side as a confidant and de facto campaign manager.

When I ask whether it is really possible to knock off a Senate majority leader, she laughs and replies, "only Reid thinks he's too big to fail." Her strategy against the Reid attack machine is to link him to the lousy economy in Nevada. When I ask her if Nevadans want to give up Mr. Reid's clout in Washington, she replies: "When Harry Reid got to be majority leader, the unemployment rate was 4.4%. Now it is 14%, higher than even in Michigan. . . . What has Harry Reid's power done for our state?" Her new TV ad, unrolled this week, hammers this message. "We know he is going to attack me constantly," she says, because "he can't possibly run on his record."

Despite the deep recession, Mrs. Angle is not impressed by Mr. Reid's desire to extend unemployment benefits. "This only incentivizes folks that could work," Mrs. Angle says, "but can't, because they're making more on unemployment than they can by going back to work. The longer they're out of the work force, their skills become less marketable." Not too many Republicans even in safe seats are willing to speak that truth.

Regarding jobs, she points to Mr. Reid's role in killing three clean coal-fired plants in rural Ely, where she and her husband have lived since 1971. After years of opposition by Mr. Reid in league with various environmental groups, NV Energy halted development of a $5 billion plant in February 2009.

That meant the loss of 5,000 jobs, Mrs. Angle says. "That's really when we realized Harry Reid doesn't care about jobs or people losing their homes. And it's also when 'Anybody but Harry Reid' signs first began to sprout up all over the state."

Sharron Angle's first foray into activism was when her son was held back in kindergarten in 1983 and "the poor little guy was made to feel like a failure. He hated school." She wanted to home school him, but the school system and the courts said no. Her response was to open a one-room school with a Christian-based curriculum. It soon had 24 students.

"I didn't realize how many other parents were angry with the school system," she recalls. She charged $125 a month to cover the cost of supplies but taught for free. (Mrs. Angle has a degree in education from the University of Nevada, Reno.)

In 1985 she rallied hundreds of parents behind her successful effort to pass a bill through the Nevada legislature allowing parents to home school anywhere in the state. The result of her effort is that in Nevada home schooling has become a popular alternative to the public schools, and Mrs. Angle is referred to as the "home school heroine."

"I was just a mother, and the government had gotten between me and my child, and that's like getting between a mother bear and her cubs," she says. "I think that's what activates the tea party movement. What they see is the government interfering with their lives, and with the inheritance of their children. Are we going to pass down liberty or deficits? And that's really what this movement is about." The cub—her 6-year-old son—now has a masters degree and teaches high school history in Yerrington, Nevada.

Mrs. Angle was later elected to the county school board, and in 1998 she ran for state legislature, where she served for eight tumultuous years. She gained a reputation as a crusader who wouldn't flinch in a battle with the leaders of either party. Critics lampoon the times she cast the lone "no" vote for spending bills. They began to call these votes "62 to Angle," she tells me, smiling.

Mrs. Angle's most legendary fight was within her own party. In 2003, then Gov. Kenny Guinn, a Republican, schemed to raise the sales tax by half a billion dollars. Mr. Guinn declared that anybody who opposed his tax was "irrelevant, irresponsible and cowardly." The governor seemed to be pointing directly at her, says Mrs.

Angle. "He knew from the start I would be against it."

The frustrated governor couldn't get the constitutionally required two-thirds vote of approval without her. As she tells the story, "at one critical point, the minority leader asked me: 'So, Sharron, what's your number?' That meant how big a tax increase could I tolerate? And I told them my number was zero."

When the bullying failed, the Nevada Supreme Court, in a spectacular abuse of the constitution, allowed the tax hike to go through without the two-thirds vote. The justices decreed that the money was needed for the schools and that the right to an adequate education took precedence over a procedural safeguard.

The next day, Ms. Angle recalls, "I went into the conference room and was told there's nothing you can do, Sharron. It's all over. The Supreme Court has the last word. And I said, 'No, it's not over.'"

She spearheaded a movement to get the Supreme Court replaced. In the next election in 2006, voters threw out five of the seven members of the Nevada Supreme Court; the other two had retired. "It was a referendum on that tax increase vote," she argues. "And the new court came in and reversed that decision and made our constitution whole."

Democrats think Ms. Angle is a piñata they easily defeat. The attacks run the gamut from her antifuoridation views ("my constituents all opposed" fluoridation), to her desire to abolish the Education Department, to favoring private Social Security accounts.

Mrs. Angle stands her ground: "I support voluntary personal retirement accounts for Social Security," she says. "It should be people's free choice." But she also notes that her 83-year-old mother and 84-year-old mother-in-law are on Social Security and Medicare. "I certainly will work to protect their benefits," she says.

Mrs. Angle is not bashful about wanting to take a knife to what she labels "C-priority programs," including federal agencies like the Environmental Protection Agency. She thinks such bodies should be funded "by the states under the 10th Amendment." As for federal education funding, Mrs. Angle believes it's a drain because control of the schools "should stay as close to the local level as possible, where the child, the teacher, and the parent are the main stakeholders, and make the majority of the decisions.

"If we did that," Mrs. Angle contends, "we would see a lot more money actually spent in the classroom."

The explosion of federal debt under President Obama and Mr. Reid, according to Mrs. Angle, is a moral and economic calamity. "We simply have to stop the Obama-Reid spending and bailouts—now," she says. It's a simple message that resonates with the tea party faithful and Republican voters.

But the key in this Senate race are swing voters—the 20% of Nevada independents who went for Mr. Obama in 2008. The political pros I talked to in the state are skeptical she can win those voters because of their liberal-leaning social views.

Mrs. Angle takes exception to my suggestion that her pro-life and antigay rights positions could hurt her. "This is a state that twice has voted to ban same sex marriages," she reminds me.

Still, the attack ads seem to be hurting her. A Las Vegas Review-Journal poll this week has the majority leader pulling into the lead for the first time by 44% to 37%. But his approval rating remains well below 50%, which always spells trouble for any incumbent, especially in this agitated political environment.

To win, Sharron Angle is going to need a major money influx from the conservative groups that pushed her over the top in the primary to counter the $25 million Mr. Reid is expected to spend. What Mrs. Angle has going for her is a contagious optimism that Nevadans would never send Mr. Reid back to the Senate given the fiscal carnage in Washington.

Nevada voters, she says, "are disillusioned, disappointed and disgusted with what had happened since the 2008 election. They are tired of this establishment machine that doesn't understand that we—the people—are in control. They are saying 'We don't care if you're a Republican or a Democrat. We don't believe either one of you.'"

She is banking on the depth of this discontent to help her topple the most powerful man in the United States Senate.

Mr. Moore is senior economics writer for the Wall Street Journal editorial page.

Copyright 2009 Dow Jones & Company, Inc.
All Rights Reserved